

Alicia Cobb

Alicia Cobb, born and raised in Stamford, CT, is a visual artist and body painter now currently residing in Stratford, CT. Exposed to different cultures at a very young age, she always knew she would be an artist. Her biggest inspirations are the human body, emotion, and nature. Her works can be found on many surfaces such as canvas, walls, glass, and people.

Specializing in face and body art, she can turn a human body into a painted work of art in just a few hours. She began live body painting at a local poetry venue called Lyrical Voices, where she also exhibited some of her canvas works. She has gone on to be a featured body art designer at many college and university events, at schools such as the University of Connecticut, Quinnipiac University, Southern Connecticut State University, and the University of Bridgeport. Alicia says, "Painting the human body is [my] favorite medium because it's like being part of a metamorphosis. and seeing people transform is an amazing experience."

Alicia also participates in community work frequently and was featured in the Connecticut Post in early 2012 for an anti-bullying mural she voluntarily created and worked on with students at Eli Whitney Elementary School. The mural was designed to promote unity among the student body. Alicia was also a mentor and art teacher at the Positive Young Brothers & Sisters Mentoring program based out of Bridgeport, CT.

As an artist, she hopes to encourage people to explore all kinds of art & be inspired. She hopes to create a sense of calm and beauty in a world that can be otherwise chaotic.
