

Anna Badini

Anna Badini has been painting since she came from Italy as a teenager. At first, it was a way of representing figuratively the things she missed, and to evoke the perceptions and emotions she experienced in Italy. In time, she painted what she discovered in America.

Badini does both representational and abstract oil paintings on canvas, anodized aluminum, and wood. As of late, her approach to painting has become simpler, basic, and rather minimalistic. She focuses more closely on certain basic aspects of nature and beauty: light, color, and form become the subject, speaking of her own emotions and to those of the viewer, thus creating a more immediate reaction to often unnamable perceptions.
