

Lesley Koenig

“Infinitely aesthetic” is the motto of Fairfield County artist Lesley Koenig. Through the mediums of form and color, she transmits the best part of herself into art and shares it with the world. Her spontaneous abstracts are done in acrylics while oils are used for realistic works and mixed media is employed for figure drawing. For acrylics, she picks up colors just like you would spontaneously start singing or dancing to a song you love. With oils, Koenig finds the process of mixing the colors similar to composing a symphony. She likes using different mediums for different genres because the medium is part of the creative process of making the piece of art. The artist’s appreciation for the infinite possibilities of working with color, form and texture is enhanced by her previous career as a clothing designer.

Koenig was born in one of the most creative, colorful and imaginative environments on earth, New York. She studied there at Parsons School of Design and The Art Students League. Additionally, travels to Europe and Asia have enhanced her point of view.

There are many things that fuel her inspiration, such as from classical art, architecture, music, nature, and observing everyday life. Koenig is also very fortunate to have a husband and children who have unique artistic gifts.
