

Teresa Phillips

Life comes at you faster than the blink of an eye, or the press of the shutter button. Teresa Phillips has always enjoyed taking pictures, but never anything too artistic until she walked into a darkroom and personally developed black and white negatives and prints with her own hands. The personal relationship she has with developing her images is an overwhelmingly beautiful and satisfying feeling. Although she has gotten into the digital photography phase, she has gotten to the point of just enjoying taking pictures and finding “happy accidents” along the way. Teresa also feels a personal relationship with the images themselves and her subjects. The more personal, the more feeling she is able to share with the viewer through her photography.

Teresa takes pictures locally and wherever else she goes. She loves to travel, so as to enjoy life at its fullest and share her world with everyone she knows, but often times, she can find herself living through the camera and that is when she began to tell herself to put the camera down and be greedy with her life’s beauty. As a child, she often wished she had a camera in her eyelids so that she could share the beautiful things she saw that were impossible to capture with a regular camera.

Life puts a smile on Teresa’s face, and to capture a picture through her lens is like capturing her smile. Although not all of life can put a smile on one’s face, it’s the capturing of emotion through an image that creates a sense of Teresa through her photography.
